

Live Fire

When civilians visited Fort Knox in July, they were to watch how the Army Reserve trains.

Maj. Jessop describes the capabilities of the M1A2 Abrams tank to a General Mills official.

The impact of a round exploding gave the visitors an audio and visual sense of the training.

Maj. Gen. William Barron, former 100th Division commander, expresses his appreciation for the support given to Reserve and Guard soldiers.

Bob Tabor, technical manager for General Mills' New Albany, Ind., plant, gives an approving thumbs up on the day's activities.
